A MURDEROUS ATTACK

Ross A. Hickok, Well Known Athlete, Shot by William Hastings.

Maj. William Hastings, a brother of the late Governor Daniel H. Hastings, made a murderous attack last Friday evening on Ross A. Hickok, husband of his niece, the former Governor's daughter, at Mr. Hickok's residence on State Street, Harrisburg.

Hastings fired seven shots at Hickok from an automatic revolver, during a hand-to-hand struggle in the hallway of the Hickok residence. Only one bullet took effect, penetrating the right side of the abdomen.

Hastings was arrested after a desperate struggle with the police, during which a score of shots were exchanged and a girl bystander was shot in the leg. Hastings himself received a bullet wound in his right arm.

Mr. Hickok is secretary of the Hickok Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of bookbinders' machinery, Harrisburg. Hastings is 75 years of age. Years ago he gained notoriety by public attacks on his brother, the Governor, whom he accused of having deprived him of his share of some family money. These attacks continued, despite explanations that the obligations were the other way. Since the death of the former Governor, William Hastings is said to have kept up his efforts upon other members of the family to obtain money, particularly during periods when his mind seemed to be unsettled.

The Hickok family was at dinner shortly after 6 o'clock Friday evening, when a ring at the door was answered by Miss Sara Hastings, a daughter of the late Governor, and sister of Mrs. Hickok. As the lady opened the door, Hastings strode in, pushing her aside and demanding to see Mr. Hickok. The latter hastened from the dining room and ordered Hastings to leave the house. Hastings pulled a revolver and fired three shots. Hickok, who is of athletic build, caught the man in his arms and hurled him through the doorway. As the door closed Hastings began firing again, sending four bullets through the door, one of which struck Hickok above the right hip.

Hastings then hurried up Second Street. The police were notified, and half a dozen gave chase. Hastings was overtaken at Second and Broad Streets, where he turned and opened fire on the police. A fusillade of bullets followed, during which Hastings emptied three revolvers. When a policeman's bullet broke his arm, Hastings fell, and was overpowered. During the melee, Louise Knisely, aged nine, was shot in the leg. She and Hastings were removed to the hospital. After his wound was dressed Hastings was taken to the county jail.

Ross Hickok graduated from Yale University in the class of 1897, Sheffield. He was a star hammer thrower on the track team, at one time holding the intercollegiate record. He also was a substitute on the football team and played in a number of games.

Mr. Hickok is well known here. He is a son of Mrs. Louise Hickok, and makes annual visits to Bedford during the summer months. His wound, while painful, is not serious, and he is recovering nicely.

School Teachers Must Read Bible

Governor Tener has signed the Flynn church and the Lower Bible reading bills. The former was the cause of many meetings of protest throughout the state; the other bill encountered the opposition of religious bodies.

The Flynn church bill, which was contested vigorously in both Houses and before Governor Tener after it had passed, provides that church property shall be held according to the canons and rules of the church. It also repeals a section of the act of 1907, which provides that no bishop or other ecclesiastic shall hold real estate with the capacity to transmit the title of it to his successor. The bill vests the title of Catholic Church property in the bishop, instead of trustees of the church.

Under the terms of the Lower bill, ten verses of the Bible must be read without comment at the opening of each public school session by the teacher in charge. Teachers who fail to obey the law are subject to dismissal if charges are preferred and substantiated.

PHOEBE PETERS

Would Give $50,000 to Bedford County Citizens.

Sixty thousand dollars is not a whole lot of money, but if I had it, I'll tell you what I'd do: I would give fifty thousand dollars to people living in Bedford County. On the last day of each month, for two hundred months, I would distribute two hundred and fifty dollars in cash prizes.

If the money were at my command now, on the 31st day of this month, a ten-dollar cash prize would be sent to Miss George and Miss Zora Mower, and also to Mr. Henry Will. These prizes would be awarded them because they have the neatest and best-looking lawns on West Pitt Street. And Mr. Roy Spiker, who is now building a residence on West Pitt, would be awarded a special prize (twenty-five dollars) because he displayed good sense and good judgment when he set his house as far back as the grade would permit. Inasmuch as he did not build up to the sidewalk line, and then erect a chickadee porch on the pavement, he deserves this special prize. Bedford is noted for her ugly, chickadee porches. Away with them! But all of the sidewalk porches are not of the chickadee type, and all the chickadee porches are not on this sidewalk.

On East Pitt Street Mrs. George Dull, Mrs. Luther Naus, Mrs. William Gardner and Mrs. Henry Reighard would each be entitled to a ten-dollar prize. Their yards are neat and attractive.

At 433 East Penn Street a ten-dollar prize would be dropped in the mail box, and 'way down on East Penn, at the last house on the north side of the street (Ben Hackett's), a ten-dollar bill would be slipped under the kitchen door. There you can see the best lawn in Bedford.

On Gravel Hill there is a little one-story cottage, the home of Miss Emma and Miss Dora Bagley. This simple little house is always neat, and pleasing to the eye. It's a lovely little place. A ten-dollar prize would be left there.

Coming down West John, I'd drop a prize at the home of Joseph Booty, and also at the home of the Steckman sisters. If you don't know why, look and see.

Slipping up to Union Street, back of the school house, I would leave a ten-dollar gold piece at the little log-cabin home of George Gardner and family. I'd give the money to Mrs. Gardner.

Then I would walk out to Echo Vale Farm and poke a ten-dollar bill into Hall and Reed's mail box, because Richard and Paul are trying to give their customers pure milk and pure cream and pure ice.

Some day, in the leafy month of June, I'll look around and see how the June prizes should be distributed. Phoebe Peters.

Miss Etta Smith

Miss Etta Smith died suddenly at her home in Bedford Township early Tuesday morning, May 20, of heart failure, aged 67 years. Three brothers survive: Peter, with whom she made her home, Ridgely and John B. Smith, of Bedford.

The funeral service was conducted at her late home Wednesday afternoon by Rev. George W. Faus. Interment was made in the Bedford Cemetery.

Miss Smith was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was highly respected by all who knew her.

HECKERMAN LETTER

Scenes Enacted During Strike of Street Car Employees.

Cincinnati, O., May 20, 1913.

I have seen floods. I have seen men taken from behind the prison walls with a rope around their necks and dragged to a convenient spot where the ropes were thrown over the limb of a huge tree and fastened so that they were dangling in the air, but I do not think that I have ever seen a strike, at least, not such a one as I saw here last week, when everything rang high and wild.

A very spectacular scene was enacted not far from the hotel, the Palace. A car was halted and some one or more persons threw out of the twenty-ninth story window several sacks of cement and other things they had nearby down on the top of the car. Of course, the car was completely wrecked and a number of pedestrians were cut and bruised. Not far away the conductor and motorman of another car were severely beaten and it is probable that the quick action of the police saved their lives. The members of this crew were hurried to the hospital where their conditions were pronounced dangerous.

The first serious fracas of the day was early in the morning when two cars were started from the barns. These were manned by strike breakers who were pulled from the cars and to save themselves from a severe beating ran off into the woods. The rioters took their time about breaking up the car. 'Tis said that over a hundred of the men who had been brought here as strike breakers by the Traction Company and were being kept at some car barns after hearing of the attacks on their partners, sent word to leave the city at once if they could be escorted to the depot. Railroad officials always import hundreds of men as strike breakers. Now the men on a strike have agreed to go back to work the moment the railroad company sanctions them as a union. Mayor Hunt has announced that he would ask the court to appoint a receiver for the street car company. These car strikes certainly work much harm to the pedestrians of the various localities in which they occur, and I want to tell you that a couple thousand strikers can very easily tie up the business of most any city.

Not long since a young man spoke to four modest appearing young ladies at the ticket office of a prominent theatre. Even whilst they knew him, yet they snubbed him and refused to speak to him, but the boy thought that he would get even with the ladies. He therefore bought a seat in the same row with them. The girls occupied the first four seats in the row and, of course, the young man had the fifth seat. They paid no attention to him nor he to them. During the early part of the play one of the actors came out on the stage and began to talk about love. Suddenly the actor asked all the ladies who were in love to stand up, and here was where the young man got in his work. Turning to the lady next to him he said "Please let me out." Naturally all four arose to let him out. Then he quietly sat down and grinned, while all others roared with glee. "Planning a battle takes brains; putting the plans into execution takes nerve and carrying the plans to a successful outcome takes nerve and brains," both of which my friend, who had been snubbed by the four ladies, had. The wiser we get, the more wisdom we find in the golden rule, for greatness, as I have found men to confess it in themselves, is surely measured by a kindness here, an interest there, a help and a suggestion and not a faultfinding at every utterance or action of the other.

Yours truly,
M. P. Heckerman.

Continues Trip From Albuquerque Across the Rockies to Colorado Springs.

The early morning's cool, dry atmosphere was idealistic for a lengthy ride of 347 miles across the Rockies. No prettier weather conditions had been observed anywhere. The first few hours of the forenoon advanced nothing of singular importance. The puffing locomotive, which tourists learn to love, was exercising all its strength as the ascent became noticeable to the unaided eye. Many pueblos were scattered about the fields that knew no fences. Alfalfa flourished in short stretches. Corn and potatoes were visible, and only that, at times. Adobe wells with pulleys, projected upon the mental screen visions of imaginary sights about that ancient Babylon. Straw houses subjected the visual landscape to an Australian tinge or hue. High on the edge of the cliffs sat happy children waving their modest kerchiefs, and frisky prairie-dogs ducked in a glimmer over a nearby area, as the shrill whistle of the engine chilled their fervor. Pine brush livened the otherwise grayish foreground that sloped upward to the eastward. The hot, sizzling atmosphere was quenched entirely, and we wondered if three days to the West they too were enjoying a fresh, bracing, pulsating inhalation that had the effect of life itself, giving a sense of keenness to the senses. Pure, silvery clouds transmuting the underlying even areas floated along in contentment. A frame house shattered the novelty of the treeless wastes, and then came tent homes pitched in fields that knew only the horizon for a boundary.

On, on and on the train rolled over these satisfying glimpses of a real prairie. The sky became veiled in gray and later the rain fell heavily. There were no rivulets in those fields or water-gulched hillsides. The water disappeared as it fell. The afternoon time was tapering toward evening. At 6 the little town of Raton opened up a new arena. Women standing in wagons drove along in a steady trot, as if star performers escaped from the Barnum Show. The inclination became more visible. "I bet I can, I bet I can, I bet I can" became the common motto for a pair of engines in the lead that spread great swirls of smoke over another in the rear heartily joining in the trio with its "I'll-help-you-to, I'll-help-you-to, I'll-help-you-to," and together merrily they tugged away contented to cover only six miles in twenty-eight minutes. But the altitude gained was 1,000 feet and that meant work. The mountainous character of the pass was accentuated on all sides, for the level plains had now been replaced with rocky hills and hillocks set up against towering folds well adorned with trees. Raton Pass lay ahead at an altitude of 7,608 feet. Steep as the course may have been, the train moved on steadily while children for experiment rolled balls down the aisle of the coaches by the force of gravity.

It was dusk when the world without became black as darkest night and all windows closed. When the windows again were hoisted, the Colorado end of the Raton Tunnel had been gained and the chattering pilots in black were humming out in an easy tune. "We-knew-we could, We-knew-we could, We-knew-we could," and then slowed down for a rest and to sever their companionship. The care of the train in its descent was entrusted to the strength of but one engineer. It was now dark. Trinidad became a lurching post. Familiar hand bells rang out in every nook and corner where a stove and counter might allow the service of a cup of coffee or a slice of ham. The majority of the transients patronized the Harvey Restaurant where food, to suit the most fastidious palates, was handed out by graceful servants. The bell tapped a warning and this, accented by the onward movement of the train, brought enthusiastic scampers from all the points of the compass. By ten, the journey of the day had ended, when friends from the country met us in LaJunta, and most enjoyably we experienced an evening drive such as we had not known since leaving Pennsylvania. Surely, we were nearing home. The farm house and the fields were so reminiscent of those within our native state. The morning broke with the promise of seeing a sugar beet farm and melon fields that supply the eastern trade with the familiar label of "Rocky Ford." The former were spotted and dotted with laborers stooped in thinning out the plants, or Mexican tents a few feet high. The gurgling of a brook exposed a muddy stream of great ve-

$3.50 RECIPE FREE, FOR WEAK MEN

Send Name and Address Today—You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow man to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest-acting restorative, upbuilding, SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 3584 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

locity moving along within its jail-like boundaries. This was an irrigation ditch along which grew Cottonwoods luxuriantly.

Much as this condition would have helped us physically, as well as mentally, but a short time, a very unreasonable short time only was spent with these hospitable people, once residents of Lancaster County. After a visit to the sanitarium placed in the midst of a barren community not yet livened by the water of irrigation, our train moved off to the Pittsburgh of the West, Pueblo, the Iron City of Colorado. But a short time here made it necessary to move on if the more uncommon experiences of life were to be realized. Colorado Springs was more desirable, and there we completed the 108 mile ride from LaJunta. Much has been said about the Royal Gorge, the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone in Colorado, and like the other two great canyons, the Yellowstone and that of the Colorado, has its ardent admirers. Some plans were laid to visit it, although we had passed by the junction and for divers reasons the matter was dropped. Again in a city overshadowed with the crest of a guardian giant mountain, it was altogether in keeping with our love of mountain climbing, to scale this one too. Experiences "on-the-hike" will be narrated in the succeeding article.

Colorado Springs

Like Los Angeles, which depends upon the bright worn coins of travelers for existence, this city well provides lodging in forty homes, for transients. It is beautifully built, calm, quiet and serene in attitude and conspicuously marked as the resort of the mountain courting populace of many states. Regardless of many others among the thirty peaks in Colorado over two and one-half miles high, that rise above that of Pike's 14,147 feet above the sea, there are no cities so accessible, or which may boast of anything comparable to the Garden of the Gods or sister springs to those of Shasta. To the north, west and southwest lay serrated lines on the horizon so much higher than those seen on the plains of New Mexico Churches built by ten different denominations extend the liberty to worship in either the Protestant or Catholic faith. Sixteen camps of varied secret organizations enable the citizens to reach every condition of men with a warm hand grasp. Fifteen hotels are within easy reach. Gardens; parks, springs, canyons, peaks and waterfalls offer diversified recreation set to nature's plan of harmony. It is a good place to stop and rest awhile. The first day and the second passed with little consequence.

What Beautiful Hair!

How often do we hear that exclamation about a certain woman's or man's hair.

A prominent scientist and hair specialist emphatically states, and has proven, that any man or woman can have luxuriant, lustrous hair, by using a famous prescription called PARISIAN Sage.

PARISIAN Sage is now made and sold in America. F. W. Jordan, Jr., the druggist, is the agent in Bedford and the readers of The Gazette can buy from him for only 50 cents a large bottle.

F. W. Jordan, Jr., knows that PARISIAN Sage will beautify the hair, cure dandruff and stop falling hair, and for that reason he sells it under a guarantee to cure or money back. Price 50 cents. Giroux Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y., American Makers. Advertisement.

PLANT TREES FOR SHADE, PROFIT, BEAUTY.

In a suit for damages for the destruction of three large maples a Pennsylvania was recently awarded $150.

The owner of the magnificent Bald win apple tree pictured certainly would laugh at such a price.

Such a tree has a commercial, ornamental and sentimental value.

The man who plants such a tree de lights in its growth. He prunes it, sprays it, protects it, digs about its roots and rejoices over its first red checked apple. He loves and is proud of that tree.

Such a tree is beautiful.

What is a landscape without a tree? Such a tree pays big money, and it's a wise poultryman who plants plenty of fruit.

It beautifies his place, enhances its value, produces paying crops at small expense, and the shade is necessary to the welfare of his flock.

We do not know an instance where healthy poultry was raised without shade, but we can easily recall where there was excessive mortality and stunted stock on account of exposure to the sun.

Because one does not see fowls dropping all around with sunstroke is no sign that heat isn't getting in its work. There aren't many cases of sunstroke but there is much heat prostration. Where fowls must run in the sun all day the heat saps their energy. It cuts off the development of chicks and changes perfectos to culls.

Our advice is, plant a tree, plant lots of trees.

Choose the fruit that fits your climate and market, and care for it with modern methods and it will pay you big.

If the man who makes two blades of grass grow where only one flourished is a benefactor to the human race how about the man who plants trees all along life's pathway? Such a tree is a monument more noble by far than granite or marble.

It grows on when a man is gone, beautifies the earth, affords luscious fruit and affords delightful shade to the weary.

Plant a tree, my friend. Again I say, plant a tree.

DON'TS

Don't over-barge for your product. It is cheating, and cheating is simply stealing.

Don't expect to have healthy fowls unless you feed greens. Same with grain. A one sided, unbalanced granulation means a balance on the wrong side of the ledger.

Don't expect a hen to make eggs of carbohydrates (fatteners). Protein and carbohydrates in a ratio of 1 to 4 is correct.

Don't be a nature faker. The farmer you get from natural methods, poultry the nearer you get to a bush-

First Curve Pitcher

Statisticians of athletics at Princeton University have entered a claim for J. M. Mann, '76, as the discoverer of the art of curve pitching. According to baseball lore available at Princeton Mann was the star pitcher of the college team known as the Nassau nine at that time. During the fall of 1874 Mann pitched several games in one week and his peculiar delivery wore the skin from the tip of his fingers. In the final contest of the week he was obliged to play third base. Late in the game he was forced to relieve the pitcher in order to save the game. Owing to the tender condition of his fingers Mann was obliged to throw the ball with little or no grip.

He immediately noticed that his delivery was breaking in an odd manner, which caused opposing batters to strike out. During the winter months he continued the experiment and in the spring blossomed out as a pitcher with a real outcurve at his command.

One way to relieve habitual constipation is to take regularly a mild laxative. Doan's Regulets are recommended for this purpose. 25c a box at all drug stores. Adv.

The Tallest Story

A group of Revolutionary heroes were swapping tall stories, and from the lips of each there fell wondrous tales of what he had done in the shock of battle of the frenzy of the charge. Finally one old fellow with long, white whiskers remarked:

"I was personally acquainted with George Washington."

"I was lying behind the breast-works one day, pumping lead into the Britishers, when I heard the patter of a horse's hoofs behind me. Then came a voice:

"Hi, there, you with the deadly aim! Look here a moment!"

"I looked around and saluted, recognizing General Washington, and he said:

"What's your name?"

"Hogan," I said.

"Your first name?"

"Pat, sir—Pat Hogan."

"Well, Pat," he said, "go home. You're killing too many men."

"I think I'd better get a few more, General," I said, kind of apologetic.

"No," he said, "you've killed too many. It's slaughter. And, Pat, don't call me General; call me George."

Clean Feed for Horses

Don't feed dirty grain to your horses. The dust, weed seeds and other foreign matter in the grain is disagreeable to the animals and injurious.

Use a sieve to measure the grain and give it a few shakes to allow the dirt and seeds to fall out before feeding. Some pour water over the grain in the sieve or dip the sieve of grain in a bucket or tub of water a few times. This is a good plan, as it removes all dust and smut. The feed boxes are kept cleaner by treating the grain in this way before feeding.

Ed. D. Heckerman Desires to Announce That He is the Agent for Thompson's Barosma, the Money-Back Kidney and Liver Cure.

There are hundreds of people, young and old, right here in Bedford who are taking medicines for various ailments, who do not even suspect that the kidneys are to blame.

These sufferers do not know that in all probability their kidneys are all troubled with itching scalp. I received, and are unable to properly filter the impurities from the blood.

It is the kidneys that keep the blood pure, and if the kidneys are not in good condition, disease of other organs of the body will surely develop. Thompson's Barosma will cure any disease of the kidneys, or Ed. D. Heckerman will give you your money back.

If you are in ill health now, and are not absolutely certain of the cause, get a 50-cent bottle of Thompson's Barosma at Ed. D. Heckerman's today. It will make you feel better in a day. It will tone up your kidneys, liver and bladder in a week.

It is the best investment you can make. It is worthy of a trial on our guaranteed plan. Ask for Thompson's Barosma. The dollar bottle contains more, than twice as much as the fifty-cent size.

A SINGULAR DUEL

By GEORGE ATWATER

I was attending a vaudeville show one evening in a small town in Nevada wherein a part of the performance was knife throwing. Dan Weatherill threw the knives at a board against which his wife stood, sending a knife about two inches from her body till they marked her outline. The performers were a young couple, and Mrs. Weatherill was very pretty.

Such performances were not to my taste, and instead of watching this one I looked elsewhere. Weatherill had plied his wife in with knives almost completely when what was supposed to be an accident occurred. But it had a definite cause which I, looking up at a stage box directly opposite the knife thrower, witnessed. I saw a man partly concealed by a curtain take something from his pocket that at first I supposed to be a pistol. He turned it in the direction of Weatherill, but not taking sight as with a weapon. I saw a flash of light from one end of the thing in the fellow's hand, and almost instantly there followed a cry from the audience. Turning my eyes upon Weatherill I saw him give a momentary glance up at the box where I had seen the light, then run forward to his wife. I noticed that one knife sticking in the board near his wife's side was out of line. She smiled at him to show him that she was unharmed.

I think I was the only person in the audience who was cognizant of the cause of the knife being thrown amiss, for every eye except mine was at the time of the flash fixed intently on what was going on on the stage. To me all was at once plain. The man in the box had flashed an electric light in Weatherill's eyes at the moment he was throwing a knife with intent to cause him to injure his wife. The curtain was lowered, and when it was raised again the next piece on the program was produced.

After the show I asked where Weatherill was stopping and found him in the lobby of his hotel. I told him that I had witnessed the attempt of the man in the box and asked if he would give me the reason for the man's inhuman act. He said that it was the old story of a man turned down by a girl and marrying his rival. At the same time Weatherill apologized for his wife's ever having been mixed up with such a man by saying that it was all the man's doings, he having forced himself upon the woman. I asked Weatherill if I could be of service to him as a witness, and after considerable thought he said that very likely I could.

The next evening curiosity led me to attend the show again. I wondered if the Weatherills would have the hardihood to repeat their performance and if the man who had flashed the light would be there. Both of these occurred, though the light flasher this time occupied a box facing the wife instead of the husband. I did not see him till the knife throwing commenced, and then he drew aside the curtains only sufficiently to show his face.

Weatherill had about half pinned in his wife and was about to throw the next knife when suddenly he turned and sent the knife at the box where his enemy sat. Of course there was a commotion in the audience.

Thought will sometimes act with lightning rapidity. It was so at this time for me. I saw that Weatherill would be tried for murder and could only get free by producing evidence that his enemy had tried to destroy him the night before with a view to cause him to kill his wife. I sprang to the box and, pushing my way through others to the injured man, searched him and found in his pocket an electric lamp. The audience and I had witnessed a duel, fought in two successive evenings.

As soon as a policeman came in I gave him the lamp, and I noted the names and addresses of those who had seen me remove it from the wounded man's pocket. He was carried to his hotel, but died on the way.

Weatherill, leaving the theater, walked to a police station and gave himself up. He was taken to jail, and I went to see him to inform him that I had taken an electric lamp from his enemy's pocket and had the names of several who had seen me do so. He grasped my hand with a fervent pressure, realizing the favor I had done him, for my having seen the flash the night before which caused his knife to go amiss and the fact that his enemy had the lamp ready for use when he was killed would be sufficient evidence for an acquittal by any unbiased court.

The man who had been killed was a leader of a rough element who threatened to take Weatherill out and lynch him, but the sheriff prepared for them, and, feeling sure of a conviction of the prisoner, they finally concluded to let the law take its course. But they did not know of the testimony I was to give. Indeed, if I had not happened to be looking away from the stage and in a certain direction on the evening the lamp was flashed I fear nothing could have saved Weatherill. As it was, my story was corroborated by the finding of the lamp in the pocket of the man who was killed.

Weatherill and his wife could not do enough to show their gratitude for my action in the matter, and we became warm friends. But there was no more knife throwing, for I took Weatherill from my employ.

"THE GREATEST KIDNEY REMEDY ON EARTH" SAYS A GRATEFUL WOMAN

I want to tell you how much good your Swamp-Root did me. About four years ago I suffered from what the doctors called fistula and for two years of that time I endured what no tongue can tell. I also had inflammation of the bladder and I tried doctors' medicines without receiving any help. Someone told me about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

After giving it a thorough trial, I received relief, so kept on using it and today I am a strong and well woman. If I ever feel badly or out of sorts, I take Swamp-Root and it always straightens me out. I honestly believe that this medicine would cure all troubles you recommend it for and it is a pleasure for me to send my testimony and photograph to you. I think Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is one of the greatest medicines on earth. Respectfully yours,

THE SERVANT QUESTION.

How Friction Between Mistress and Maid May Be Avoided.

Women spoil their servants because they do not trust them, and the fault is more with the mistress than with the maid, for women who are educated and mature should be clearer and wiser in their dealings than women who are not educated and who, because of their antecedents and limited experience, are so immature that in many ways they are very like children.

If the maid suspects her mistress of trying to get every bit of work out of her that is possible and of paying her the smallest wages that she can persuade her to take, if the mistress is sure that the maid will do as little work as she can and will "strike" for the maximum wages, what else can they be but enemies, how else can they look at each other but askance? Fancy having in your house not only a perfect stranger, but one who considers you to be her enemy, with the certain knowledge also that she is unfriendly to you. And yet that is the kind of discord which exists every day and all day in "the best regulated families."

A practical knowledge of the work to be done, an ability to convey that knowledge to servants, to observe without appearing to observe, to correct without nagging and to show friendliness without familiarity—all these will enable us to give to a maid a sense of personal freedom and responsibility and a practical knowledge of the details of her work which will tend to dissipate the hostility engendered by years of misunderstanding.

FLOATING GARDENS.

They Have Them Anchored With Living Hedges in Mexico.

The imagination of man has always been impressed by floating islands. In ancient times such islands were regarded with superstitious reverence, and the romantic story of Delos—the natal isle of Apollo and Artemis—is but one of the many cases recorded in classical literature of vagrant islands in the sea.

Pliny says that in the lake of Vadimonis there is a dark wood which is never seen in the same place for a day and a night together, and he describes the islands called Calaminæ (i. e. "made of reeds"), in Lydia, which were not only driven by the wind, but could be pushed about from place to place with poles.

Floating gardens—some natural and some artificial—have flourished in many parts of the world from early times. They are particularly advantageous in regions exposed to floods, where a garden planted on terra firma would be ruined by these occurrences, while the floating garden is undisturbed by the rise of the waters. The famous floating gardens of Kashmir are a case in point.

The lake of Xochimilco, near the city of Mexico, is nearly covered with floating gardens, called chinampas, on which are raised vegetables and flowers for the city markets. They are formed of floating masses of water plants, covered with soil and secured by poplar stakes. The latter take root and surround the islands with living hedges.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Origin of Curtain Calls.

The first curtain call took place on the evening of Feb. 26, 1743. On that memorable evening Voltaire's "Merope" was performed for the first time in Paris. The author was known to the Paris public, but nothing that they had seen of his had pleased them so much as "Merope," and the enthusiasm found expression in noisy demands to see the author. In a letter Voltaire says this of the incident: "They dragged me out and led me by force to the box occupied by the Duchess de Villars and her daughter-in-law. The whole theater seemed to have gone mad—all shouted to the duchess to kiss me. The noise became so great that the lady finally obeyed. So I was, like Alain Chabrier, publicly kissed, but he was asleep, while I was wide awake."

Can't Keep a Good Man Down.

The way for a young man to rise is to improve himself in every way he can, never suspecting that anybody wishes to hinder him. Allow me to assure you that suspicion and jealousy never did help any man in any situation. There may sometimes be ungenerous attempts to keep a young man down, and they will succeed, too, if he allows his mind to be diverted from its true channel to brood over the attempted injury. Cast about and see if this failing has not injured every person you have ever known to fall into it.—Abraham Lincoln.

In Luck.

"How's your son getting along since he graduated as a doctor?"

"Splendidly."

"Building up a good practice?"

"Yes, indeed. He's only been practicing a year, but he's already got one family which pays its bill promptly on the 10th of every month."—Detroit Free Press.

Cruelty.

"I hate to put some of my photographic subjects on my plates."

"Why so?"

"Because they are such sensitive plates."—Baltimore American.

She Took to the Road

By BERTHA L. TOMLINS

All civil wars are terrible, but all civil wars are full of romance. This is because people divided and trying to kill one another brings greater grief than when they fight a foreigner.

Gertrude Milbank, the daughter of a country gentleman of Devonshire, found herself at the time Cromwell became ruler of England under the title of lord protector—her father and two brothers having been killed fighting for their king—an orphan and without any one to lean upon. Her father's estate had been forfeited, and she had no means of sustenance. Reared in luxury she was brought face to face with want.

In that age two professions were practiced by gentlemen, one of which is now obsolete, while the other has been relegated to the criminal classes. These were highway robbery and piracy. The highwayman was a popular character, while Morgan, the most brutally bloodthirsty of pirates, died in England unpunished for his many crimes. At the end of the war that lost Charles I. his kingdom and his head many of the young officers who had fought for him being impoverished took to the road for a living. Gertrude Milbank, bitter against the Roundheads who had beheaded her king, killed her father and brothers and robbed her of her patrimony, having heard of these cases of ex-soldiers turning highwaymen, determined to imitate their example. She stood five feet eight inches and was a marvel of beauty and stateliness. The former did not serve her purpose, for while on the road she was masked, but the latter helped her to maintain the appearance of a man.

Having attired herself in the male costume of the period, her own black hair falling in curls over her broad white lace collar, booted and spurred, mounted on a horse she had ridden constantly since she was a little girl, she sallied forth one starlight night to take a purse. Having waited for some time behind a clump of trees for the passage of a victim she at last heard the sounds of wheels. Her courage was oozing out of her finger ends, but she stopped it by recalling the wrongs of her family and, riding into the road, called upon the coachman to stop. He obeyed, and Gertrude, putting a pistol in through the window of the coach, called out in somewhat tremulous tones:

"Your money or your life!"

There was no reply for a few moments, then a man's voice said: "I have but a few pounds in my pocket, to which you are welcome, sir. But I wear a ring of considerable value which you will be able to turn into money."

"Such liberality," replied Gertrude, "could not come from an accursed Roundhead. You must be a loyal subject of our king across the water; therefore I shall let you pass without tribute, for I will take nothing from one of the king's party."

Gertrude was about to whirl her horse's head around when the man in the coach stopped her.

"You are mistaken," he said. "I would not save my property under false pretenses; I support the protector."

Such action was a surprise to Gertrude, who could not understand why the man should give her information unasked and with it property he might have saved. While she hesitated her victim got out a wallet, took a ring from his finger and handed both to her. She accepted them mechanically, her mind being diverted by the man's strange action.

"You need not take the trouble to raise money from the ring," he added. "It is an heirloom, and I prefer to redeem it."

"I shall not make myself known by calling upon you to do so," replied Gertrude. "Rather keep it."

"Drive on," was the only reply, and this was addressed to the coachman who whipped up his horses, resuming the journey. As the carriage drove away the man within called out: "I will call upon you when I wish to redeem the ring. Miss Milbank, and will give you thrice what you can get for it elsewhere."

As the coach rolled away Gertrude sat on her horse paralyzed. The man till he spoke the last words disguised his voice and she had not recognized it. She had robbed one to whom when the war broke out she was engaged, but whose father had persuaded him to espouse the cause of the parliament. The son had refused to listen to Gertrude's efforts to retain his loyalty to the king, and when he broke with her the recognition was quite enough to cure her on its very threshold of any desire to follow the career of a highwayman and, riding back to the cottage she had come from, she divested herself of male attire and resumed her wonted garments.

The next morning she was meditating hiding herself from the man who had robbed and wondering how she could return his property before doing so, when he rode up to her door, dismounted and entered the house.

"I have come to redeem my ring," Gertrude, he said.

"Taking it from her finger, she handed it to him without a word, but in tending to refuse his offer of money. Instead of handing her the gold he took her hand and placed the ring on her finger.

Then her head sank on his breast.

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

Bread made with
Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with phosphate powder:

68¼ Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with
alum powder:

67¾ Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

Centerville

May 19—Mrs. George Oster, a bride of about three months, died at her home here on Thursday, May 15, aged 20 years, five months and 15 days. Besides her husband, she is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hite, and the following brothers and sisters: Percy, Jay, Thomas, Earl, Ida, Ortha, Blanche and Elva, all living in the Valley. The funeral services were conducted in the M. E. ## Cessna

May 20—J. Ed. Blackburn of the Blackburn Milling Company has purchased a nice touring car and seems to enjoy the same. If all the autos were run with as much consideration for other people as that one is, the autoists would have more friends among the people who must have their teams on the road.

Jacob Wisegarver has built a new porch to his house, which greatly improves the appearance of the place.

About forty relatives and friends of George Anderson met at his home last Saturday evening to celebrate his birthday. George was entirely innocent; he didn't know they were coming. His son Alfred was in it too. His birthday came on Sunday. Everybody enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

The State Highway Department have their foremen, workmen and teams now on the roads that had been taken over by the state. They are making as good a road out of dirt as is possible. The roads need it, for there was nothing done last year.

Bedford Grange is steadily increasing and we believe that for a real live Grange, she holds the banner. Initiations every other night. Business meeting every other night. The literary programs are interesting and well rendered. The Grange will hold a festival the evening of June 7.

James Allen has a very sick horse. Eli Griest is treating his new horse to a coat of brick red paint. When finished it will be a nice looking place.

The big Mowry limekiln is still running. Only one kiln is fired at a time. Scarcity of help seems to be the hold-back on keeping both big kilns going at once.

Thomas Willis and R. O. Griffith have both been on the sick list for some time; both are improving very slowly.

Sawmills are now cutting the timber on Bert Hoenstine's farm and on part of the John Henry Shaffer tract. Good timber in this country is getting very scarce. This is a business that seems to be a necessity, but there is no timber being replanted here.

There will be a meeting of the Bedford County Rural Letter Car## riers' Association held in Everett

May 30 at 1 o'clock p. m. This is a very important meeting and all of the carriers in the county should participate in the meeting. ## A Chase For a Wife

She Led the Chaser a Pretty Dance

By P. A. MITCHEL

There was a ring at the telephone bell at the University club, and a waiter answered the summons.

"Is Mr. Kennard in the club?"

"I'll see, sir. Hold the wire."

A messenger was sent scurrying through the apartments and found Kennard engaged in a game of poker in one of the private rooms.

"You're wanted at the telephone, sir."

Kennard went to the telephone booth and asked who had called him.

"I am Mr. Gaffney of Gaffney, Calderwood & Funk, attorneys. We have a telegram from correspondents in San Francisco announcing the death of Norman L. Kennard."

"My uncle?"

"He has bequeathed his fortune to you, but there is a condition involving a limit of time which induced our correspondent to use the telegraph instead of the mail. I would recommend you to call at our office at once since what we have to communicate is not exactly the thing to be transmitted over a telephone."

"Call a cab," said Mr. Kennard, and in ten minutes he was in Mr. Gaffney's private office, where the telegram that announced his uncle's death was shown him. It contained a brief clause of the will that, since the testator wished that his fortune should be kept together and desired his stepdaughter, Agatha Burch, to share in it, the inheritance was conditional on Kennard marrying Miss Burch. The limit of time was short, being but six weeks, and Miss Burch, who was a great traveler, was abroad.

Mr. Kennard "got busy" at once. A steamer would sail in six hours, and he spent most of this time telegraphing to learn the whereabouts of Miss Burch. Unfortunately no one knew just where to locate her. Her permanent address was Paris, from whence her mail was forwarded to her. Kennard determined to make straight for that city, where he would learn the last order given for the forwarding of mail.

During the voyage his mind was continually on the matter before him. He had never seen Miss Burch, but had heard that she had been something of a belle in San Francisco society, was pretty and of an independent and a fearless disposition. She had been abroad several times and each time had penetrated farther into barbarous countries. Indeed, it was surmised that her stepfather, who was opposed to her ramblings, had refrained from bequeathing her any part of his fortune outright since it would leave her free to continue them rather than settling down in a permanent home. She had been his sole reliance in a domestic way, and he had been bitterly opposed to this trip she had taken. She was very fond of her stepfather, but so great was her passion for visiting out of the way lands that she had promised him if he would consent to this one trip she would never go on another. When she left he was perfectly well, but soon after sickness and died, with no one to smooth his pillow except a hired nurse. The peculiar will was the result of this lamentable situation.

When Kennard reached Paris he betook himself to the branch office of a banking house in the Place Vendôme, where he learned that the last place designated for forwarding Miss Burch's mail was Vienna. At the time war had just been declared between the Balkan states and the Turks.

"For heaven's sake!" exclaimed Kennard. "I hope her mania for seeing things won't lead her to visit theater of war. If I have to hunt for her there it will be like looking for a needle in a haystack."

Taking the first train for Vienna he had the bad luck to meet with an accident and was delayed twelve hours. On reaching Vienna he learned that Miss Burch had left four hours before his arrival. Orders had been left at the office of her hotel to forward mail to Belgrade, the capital of Serbia. There was no train for that point till evening, and he was obliged to lounge about Vienna nearly all day. When the hour for departure came he was told that owing to the unsettled conditions and the mobilization of troops there was no prospect of getting through on scheduled time. This added to his discomfort, and each day, each hour, the fear grew upon him that he might not catch the lady in time.

Kennard was delayed two days in Budapest owing to the railway equipment being used in the movement of troops and did not reach Belgrade until the end of the third day after leaving Vienna. On reaching his destination Miss Burch had left at her hotel and learned that she had taken a train for Bukharest, in Roumania.

"Great Scott!" ejaculated the pursuing man. "She's getting nearer and nearer to the fighting. Suppose she should be killed! I wonder if the will makes any provision in case of her death before I can marry her."

Before leaving America he had asked the attorney to write out such information as he might need, and now taking out the paper containing it he found the words, "A marriage as early as possible is desirable, for in case of the death of either party interested the property would go to the institutions designated."

"There's another danger," growled Kennard. "The confounded girl is going right down among a barbarous people who are killing one another right and left. She's sure to fall by the hand of some bloodthirsty Turk. However, Roumania doesn't seem to be mixed up in the affair at present, and if she will only stay there it will be all right. But time is getting short."

Then he began to think of the matter of a courtship. A girl who would be so reckless as to go down into a region where a bloody war was going on might be silly enough to refuse a fortune that was attached to a man she didn't happen to fancy. And even if she fancied him would she forego that sentimental nonsense called a courtship?

When Kennard reached Bukharest he learned that a young woman answering Miss Burch's description had gone to Sofia, in Bulgaria, but as to Miss Burch as a certainty he had lost the trail. Since he could not find her in Bukharest there seemed nothing for him to do but to go to Sofia.

On reaching the capital of Bulgaria he found everything in turmoil. Troops were being dispatched to the front, and everybody was busy forwarding supplies and munitions of war. Kennard went the rounds of the hotels and on the register of one found the name of Agatha Burch, U. S. A.

"I wish to see that lady at once," said the pursuing lover to the proprietor, pointing to the name on the book. "That young lady! She's gone."

"Gone! Gone where?"

"Let me see what address she left for her letters. Ah, here it is! 'Forward letters with the army mail.' Now I remember—that's the American girl who organized a corps of nurses."

"She's a fool!" cried Kennard, beside himself with irritation.

"A fool! I beg your pardon, sir. The young lady made herself very much admired and beloved here. It was a noble act for her to—"

"Noble nonsense! She's demented, crazy for mingling with new and exciting scenes. There's a large fortune waiting for her in America, and if she gets killed she will lose it."

"Of course she can have no use for a fortune if she is dead, but what is that to you?"

"Why, you muttonhead! I'll lose a fortune, too, and a wife."

"It seems to me that it is you who are demented."

Well, there was nothing left for Kennard but to follow the army that had gone in the direction of Adrianople. As for the ordinary means of transportation, that was not to be thought of. So he bought a horse and, mounted, pursued his way.

There was terrible fighting between the allies and the Turks, and Kennard made no headway whatever in finding Agatha Burch, though he used every means that presented itself for reaching her. At one time he drove an army supply wagon; at another he passed himself off for a newspaper correspondent. Lastly he took a gun and marched with an infantry regiment. But here he got more than he had bargained for. The force he was with went into battle with the Turks, and he was obliged to fight.

"What folly!" he exclaimed. "This girl by her idiosyncrasy has not only endangered her life, but mine, and there's a million dollars waiting for us at home with which to see the world in a rational manner."

Suddenly Kennard was turned clear around by the force of a bullet, and his legs dropped under him. He was trampled by those behind.

"Why in thunder," he groaned, "didn't that uncle of mine leave me his fortune without sending me after such a woman? But I don't blame him for not leaving any of it to her direct. She'd use it to visit the south pole."

The last man who stepped over Kennard ground a hobnail boot in his face. This made him a sight to behold. He lost consciousness, and the next thing he knew a woman with a red cross on her arm was pouring some liquor down his throat. Kennard had seen a number of Red Cross nurses during his marches, and every time he saw one he made inquiries for the nurse he wanted. He asked this one if she knew an American Red Cross nurse named Burch, and she said Miss Burch was the head of her corps of nurses. She was on the field directing the succor of the wounded. Kennard begged his informant to call her chief. She did so, but it was more than an hour before Miss Burch came.

"Are you the American who desires to see me?" she asked of the much mutilated, dirty and bloody Kennard.

"Yes."

"Well, what can I do for you?"

"Marry me."

"Marry you!"

The look of repulsion at his appearance was discouraging.

"Are you Agatha Burch?"

"Yes."

"Well, your stepfather is dead and left his fortune to me, his nephew, with the provision that I marry you within six weeks after the probate of the will."

"My goodness gracious! Suppose I refuse?"

"You get nothing; neither do I."

"I think about a week."

"That's lucky. If I had to say 'Yes' right now I'd decline. Perhaps in a week I can get you to look like a human being. We'll see."

Within the seven days Miss Burch could see in the wounded Kennard the semblance of a good looking man, and she accepted the conditions of the will.

"That uncle of mine and your stepfather was no fool," remarked the groom after the ceremony had been performed. "I'll see that you settle down."

Why Send Money South?

We are paying for bran, mill-feeds and oil meal good money that might just as well be kept at home. We figure that this comes back to us in the milk and butter money,—but why not keep it all at home to earn money in the bank for us?

Every bank in the dairying districts ought to have prominent signs posted "Grow Alfalfa and Soy Beans." That would swell deposits. Alfalfa can be grown on nearly every farm in the dairying districts if the owner will only do what our local experience shows is necessary to give the plant a fair show; and alfalfa will take the place of the bran. At present prices milk from bran is often made at a loss.

The soy bean will take the place of the bran, mill feeds and oil meal; and it will do a lot more than these things.

Wilson soy beans, for instance, are slender stemmed and tall; a stiffly upright bush, not hard to cut. They can be planted in rows with the silage corn after the latter is up; if inoculated will actually increase the yield of silage corn while at the same time raising the protein average of the silage. At the same time they will do much to offset the drain on the soil fertility from the corn.

Mammoth yellow soy beans, planted in corn at the last cultivation, will furnish a fairly heavy growth for green soiling, for late fall pasturing or for hogging down; or they can be turned under to preserve soil fertility. They are great nitrogen gatherers; and the Mammoth has the strongest and most satisfactory root system of any variety with which we have been working.

Haberlandt, Wilson, Peking, Sable and Hollybrook, drilled in for grain, or planted in rows for cultivation, will furnish heavy crops of beans which may be fed whole, and which are equal, pound for pound, to oil meal. The straw is readily eaten by the cattle and is a better milk producer than corn stover.

If we are dairying why not break away from outworn traditions and grow the kind of feed we need for dairying? It is far cheaper to buy oats than to buy concentrates; and oats rob the soil while the soy beans improve it.

If you have been laboring under the idea that the soy bean is an uncertain plant, get rid of it. The freeze of May 11th, the most destructive May freeze of many years, failed to affect a local field of soy beans; and we have had repeated cases of soy beans volunteering in the spring from seed scattered in the fall, and making good growth during the alternate freezes and thaws of April.

As to fall: it is now established from local results that the soy bean plant may be frozen so as to destroy it but will still mature the seed, provided they have been fully formed in the pod.

The soy bean comes nearest to being indestructible of any plant producing grain with which we have had experience; and it has the widest latitude of time for planting. It has matured seed from plantings in early July; and has undeveloped possibilities as a catch crop.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Second Quarter,
For May 25, 1913.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Gen. xliii, 18, 19, 23, 34—Memory Verses, 29, 30—Golden Text, 1 John 2:10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Because of Jacob's determination not to let Benjamin go to Egypt and the determination of the sons not to go without him they tarried till the corn they had brought was consumed. Then when they had to go or starve Judah pleaded with his father, saying: "Send the lad with me, and we will arise and go. . . . I will be surety for him" (verses 8-10). This is all so suggestive, for the great and only surety, the Lord Jesus, came from the tribe of Judah (Heb. vii, 14), and in one of the great "Who is this?" verses concerning Him it is written, "Who is He that hath been surety for his heart to approach unto me?" (Jer. xxx, 21, R. V. M.). I still believe, as I have long believed, that anointed eyes may see Jesus Christ on every page of Scripture, but he must be blind indeed who cannot see Him in this wonderful story.

As Jacob sent away his sons with a present for the ruler in Egypt who controlled the corn and double money to pay for the first corn and the next and Benjamin he said, "God Almighty give you mercy before the man" (verse 14). This is one of the most wonderful names of God in the Bible, and it is found thirty-one times in the book of Job and only twenty-six times in all the rest of the Bible.

It is "El-shaddai," which may signify "The Mighty God, who is all sufficient." To know the sufficiency of God we must know our own insufficiency and become, like Job, thoroughly emptied of self (Job xlii, 5, 6). Jacob was now thoroughly emptied, even of his last loved son, Joseph's own brother, and was very near the time of fullness of blessing.

We may not attempt to describe the feelings of Joseph as he looked upon the face of his own brother and gave orders to the ruler of his house to make ready to have those men dine with him, nor can we imagine their surprise as Simeon having joined them, those eleven men sat before him in the order of their ages—Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah and so on to the youngest, Benjamin (verses 23, 33). We think of how thoroughly we are known by Him whom we know not as we might and will some day, and we cannot but think of another gathering of twelve when He sat with the eleven at the passover, Judas having gone.

Their fear and the "Peace be to you, fear not," of verses 18, 23, make us think of His "Peace be unto you. . . . Why are ye troubled?" to the ten, and a week later His "Peace be unto you" to the eleven (Luke xxiv, 36-38; John xx, 26). The great adversary takes delight in filling us with thoughts of fear and unrest, but the Lord's thoughts to us are always thoughts of peace (Jer. xxix, 11; Ps. xxix, 11; xxxv, 8; John xiv, 1; Matt. xxiv, 6). The steward of Joseph's house seems to have known the God of Israel (verse 23), and we are not surprised, being in the service of such a man as Joseph. His words must have comforted the brethren and specially when he restored Simeon to them, no doubt in good condition.

The water for their feet (verse 24) takes us back to xviii, 4, and on to Luke vii, John xiii. When Joseph came home at noon they had the present ready and bowed themselves to him to the earth with probably never a thought of a dream they had heard twenty years before. There should be great comfort to every believer in "the eternal purpose of God" and in the assurance that "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Eph. iii, 11; Jer. li, 29). How can our hearts be quiet as we look on this scene and hear Joseph say to them: "Is your father well, the old man of whom ye spake? . . . Is this your younger brother of whom ye spake unto me? God be gracious unto thee, my son."

We do not wonder that Joseph could not restrain his feelings and that he had to hurry to his chamber to weep. How natural to read that after weeping he washed his face before he could be calm enough to go out to them again (verses 30, 31). Did you never do it after those tears had come that you could not restrain and your eyes were red with weeping, but a plentiful supply of water helped, and you looked like yourself again?

I do not quite see how they could be merry with him. They did not know him except as the ruler of Egypt, and their guilt concerning their brother, of whom they said, "One is not," could not altogether fade from their minds, but it is wonderful how pleasant surroundings can make us forget for a time. They were certainly highly honored to be thus invited to dine with so great a man, and for the time being seemed to forget all else. They needed, however, more humiliation and a deeper conviction of sin, and it had to come.

There can be no lasting peace until we have learned that we are sinners and nothing but sinners and that in us—that is, in our flesh—dwelleth no good thing (Rom. vii, 18). Miss Habershon's suggestive typical lessons from this chapter are concerning the feast made ready and the perfect love of Him who makes the feast casting out all fear (Matt. xxii, 4; 1 John iv, 18; Rom. xv, 13). She also quotes Luke xv, 24, in connection with their being merry.

The June American Magazine

In the June American Magazine Ida M. Tarbell, writing about "The Hunt for a Money Trust," describes and criticizes some of the workings of the New York stock market. In the same number Henry K. Pomroy, a former President of the Stock Exchange, replies to Miss Tarbell.

Other interesting serious contributions to the number are: The Reminiscences of Brand Whitlock, Mayor of Toledo, O.; "Health and Horse Power," by Dr. Woods Hutchinson; "A Creed of Work for Women," by Laura Drake Gill; "The Joys of the True Walker," by Walter Prichard Eaton; and "The Repertoire Theater in America," in which the Dramatic Editor of The American Magazine makes a thorough and entertaining report of certain aspects of the business of the stage.

Fiction, notable for its liveliness and reality, is contributed by David Grayson, Arnold Bennett, Stanley R. Osborn, V. H. Cornell, James Francis Dwyer and Louis Graves.

There is a great assortment of humorous material, including contributions by James Montgomery Flagg, Gelett Burgess and Kin Hubbard. The "Interesting People" department and "The Interpreter's House" complete a splendid number.

The Up-to-Date House

I want you to build me a fashionable home," said the man who had made a lot of money.

"Have you any special ideas as to the style of house you want?" asked the architect.

"Not exactly. I want one of those modern places. You know the kind I mean—one with a living-room too big to keep warm and a kitchen too small to cook in."

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

The June Woman's Home Companion

The June Woman's Home Companion contains a further account of the fight for "Better Babies" which is now being carried on all over the United States. A number of photographs of prize-winning children are reproduced with this month's report. The Companion is offering prizes for children who receive the highest markings at baby shows of the new kind—baby shows where children are judged not according to their physical beauty but according to their health. The campaign is a great educational movement, inasmuch as it is promulgating the best available ideas in the scientific care of children.

Other valuable articles are: "How To Take Your Vacation;" "The World's Greatest Lovers;" "Not One Minute to Lose," an article in which the author tells about the great work done by the National Consumers' League toward convincing the public not to buy goods made in sweatshops; "Fit for Company," an article in which the author shows the absurdity of the idea that extravagance and foolish preparations must be made for "company;" and the "Mother's Part," and article in which the author makes many practical suggestions to mothers in connection with the training of daughters.

Fiction by a great variety of writers, art features contributed by many of our most talented illustrators, and twelve departments full of good reading and useful ideas, complete an issue unusually charming and serviceable to the reader.

"Why was it unspeakable?"

"He was dumb and had to spell it out on his fingers."

Thousands More Civil Service Appointments

The establishment of the Parcel Post has greatly increased the work at the Postal Department. Thousands of additional Civil Service appointments will be necessary.

The opportunities for positions in the Civil Service were never better. Civil Service positions are desirable because the hours for work are not too long, salaries are good and certain and promotions are frequent.

The greater number of appointments will be made in the Post-Office Service, paying from $600 to $1,700 and more per year; the R. F. D. Service, paying $1,100 per annum to standard routes; and the Railway Mail Service, paying from $900 to $1,800 per year.

Any American over 18 years of age who passes the U. S. Civil Service examination is eligible to one of these positions. The I. C. S. Civil Service Course instructs you how to meet the requirements of the Civil Service examination in any branch of the Government work.

L. D. Blackwelder,
Bedford, Pa.

When my Ford car wears out, I want another of same make. The first year it went 6,000 miles, last year 9,000 and so far this winter has gone 1,000, being on road every month of winter, making 16,000 miles in all. I have used only three sets of tires in running this distance. I thought, judging from other cars, that I would need another car this spring but this one is running good and strong. It has many thousand miles in it yet, and is good for the season.

Yours truly,

The Apple Tent Caterpillar
Senator Baldwin, whose home is in the northern part of Pennsylvania, has called attention of State Zoologist H. A. Surface, Harrisburg, to the unusual outbreak of tent caterpillars this year. This is one of the pests which is beginning to appear in accordance with the statements published by Prof. Surface in January, to the effect that this would be an unusual year for such pests as Aphids or Plant Lice, June Bugs and White Grubs, Cut Worms, Canker Worms and Tent Caterpillars.

Senator Baldwin says that throughout the northern and central portions of Pennsylvania the caterpillars are so in evidence upon practically all wild cherry and most neglected fruit trees that they are already quite defoliating them. These pests are conspicuous on account of the large tents which they make in the forks of branches, and which they leave to travel the leaves for food. They cause great damage by eating away the leaves, which for trees perform the functions of both lungs and stomach. This causes a new set of leaves to develop on new twigs, which means late growth, a weakened tree, poor fruit buds, no crop for this year, special dangers of winter freezing next winter, and but little crop for next year, on trees that are permitted to remain badly infested by pests this spring.

Dr. Surface recommends destroying tent caterpillars by one of the following means. 1. Spray as soon as the young worms or larva appear, using a quart of an ounce of Paris green or one ounce of arsenate of lead in fifty gallons of water. 2. Cut off the infested branches and burn them. A certain amount of pruning at this time of year is more beneficial to the tree than injurious. 3. With a brush on the end of a pole twist out the nest and dip this into a vessel containing kerosene or any other oil or into hot water. 4. Load a shot gun with a good charge of powder and plenty of paper wadding, but no shot, and shoot them out.

Do not attempt the too common practice of trying to remove them by burning the tents. It takes only a small amount of heat to injure the bark of a tree and make it commence to die, or permit fatal blight germs to enter where thus injured. Trees are more easily injured by burning than is generally believed. The poorest possible way of getting rid of tent caterpillars is by burning.

Wild cherry trees, seedling fruit trees, and all old and worthless fruit trees, should be cut down and burned as a general means of horticultural sanitation in getting rid of insects and plant diseases. The little black wild cherry is worthless, and the tree is a pest breeder. Orchards that are regularly sprayed, as for the codling moth, will not be injured by other pests which are here mentioned.
